McDaniel starts off by stating that it seems impossible to him to describe his process: "I don't know what I did; I only know what I tried to do, what I wanted to do." Yet he concludes his thorough and clear description of what he did in fact do with the observation that "it never occurred to me that anyone could mistake how the poem was made." So, the poet seems to be claiming, I the writer have no memory/control/culpability over my work, but to you the readers this process, so mysterious to me, should be utterly transparent

We need to ask fundamental questions: Who will capture the economic benefits that the Internet creates? Will all the value end up going to customers, or will companies be able to reap a share of it? What will be the Internet's impact on industry structure? Will it expand or shrink the pool of profits? And what will be its impact on strategy? Will the Internet bolster or erode the ability of companies to gain sustainable advantages over their competitors?
